Labor Did It
Action Wanted
Munsey, Spartan Nurse
The Royal Remembrancer
By Arthur Brisbane

Overlooked 1922, by Ray Campbell, chairman of the House Rules Committee, member of Congress for many years, important supporter of this administration, is well and badly beaten. He says in substance, "Labor beat me. Fifteen thousand strikers voted for my opponent."

Many Republicans will tell a sad story about "Labor" after this election. When workingmen feel that the administration is not only owned but more or less despised by railroad owners that refuse to consider its suggestions, there is apt to be surprising voting.

Those at the top believe that when the big election comes in two years all this will be forgotten. They may be right, for "Labor" has a faculty for forgetting. The coming election, however, will see surprise.

The country wants action, something done, matters cleared up here in the United States. It is tired of seeing industry and recuperation at the mercy of bickering employers and employees.

The country has not changed its mind on fundamental questions. Senator Reed carried the State of Missouri, and in doing that he defeated the Wilson Democracy, which had attacked him in the person of Mr. Wilson himself, and defeated the League of Nations' advocate.

The people don't want a League of Nations to manage the whole world, but they do want an American administration able to manage the United States.

One Senator suggested an investigation to find whether tariff Senators were working for the dear people or their dear pockets. Now Senator Gooding of Idaho, head of the Republican farm tariff bloc, and as it happens, a close cousin Senator (which is to his credit, the country needs a sharp) suggests an investigation of the "entire press."

He suspects that newspapermen oppose tariff changes because they are paid, through advertising, to do what "big stores want."

This will be welcome to real newspapermen, if the Senate has time for the investigation. Newspaper men are not so much to be taken for granted as they used to be.

It is suggested that Munsey, publisher of the New York Herald, etc., should be investigated. He would sell Munsey for his intellect is far above mere money. Nobody can accuse him of greed, or advertising by attacking the tariff or otherwise. Standing like a Spartan nurse, he has seen a dozen little newspaper babies die in his arms, simply because they had nothing with which to fight them.

Some newspapermen are foolish, some poor things, come from money, are pitiful snobs, tending to what they call respectability, and some admit accumulating money so much that they spend their time hawking before it.

But as a rule, newspapermen are honest. You can decide for yourself whether they deserve credit for it.

If they have big circulation, you can't keep advertising out of them; if they haven't the circulation, they won't get advertising.

Public officials seem to be getting continued on Page 2, Column 3.

PREFERS MYSTERY DEATH TO BEGGING

Nobody called. Nobody cares. She lies there hovering between life and death, a poor, wrinkled old woman in a shabby cot, without a friend in the world.

And yet—she was too proud to beg. Death was preferable.

She said so in her farewell letter addressed to the coroner.

She calls herself plain Mary Merrill, sixty-seven years old and she is in a ward at City Hospital. Her letter is a classic, also a mystery. The first sentence reads: "This is a clear case of suicide."

Yet, in a conscious moment today the little old woman opened her thin lips and whispered to a nurse: "I didn't take poison, dear. I went into a drug store and asked for something to settle my stomach. I woke up here."

NO TRACE OF POISON

Strangely enough doctors have failed to find a trace of poison in her system. They say she is run down, emaciated, in a very weakened condition with a slim chance of recovery.

Read Mary's farewell note to the world. It is a document for the ages. Written on the brink of the grave, here it is:

To the Coroner: This is a clear case of suicide. I can't go on any further under existing conditions.

I was born a lady and very fine environment, but an now aged, I can't go on any further. I look for work to go to the younger women.

I will look for work Monday for the last time and if I fail I will end it all.

Yesterday I had but one meal, only a few cents in my pocket. I have no money to pay the rent and have no friends to appeal to. Whoever finds my body please notify Carroll E. Swan, president of the Massachusetts Cremation Association.

(Unsigned). P. S.—I AM REALLY TIRED OF LIFE.

CITY OF ROMANCE TILLED

Ukulele-Land Honeymoon for Coca Cola King and Young Divorcee

By Compellatious News Service.

New Orleans, La., Aug. 5.—

Mrs. Oursine De Boucheville, young divorcee, characterized as "the raving beauty" of New Orleans, and Asa G. Candler, seventy-one-year old multi-millionaire owner of Coca Cola in Atlanta, are principals in one of the greatest romances ever known in this city of romance.

Their wedding will take place in Reno, where the bride-to-be recently gained a divorce from Adolph Hogue, New Orleans insurance man. Their love story will be told in the city's moonlight by a first honeymoon. Mrs. De Boucheville second (Underland) for the honeymoon.

About October 1, the couple will be at home in the Atlanta apartment building in the French quarter. Mrs. De Boucheville comes of an ancient Creole family, descended from French nobility. She is seventy-four years of age. Her beauty is of the blonde and Norman type. Her tall figure, vivacious and elegant charm made her outstanding in any crowd.

WARM GRAS QUEEN.
In the year of her formal bow to society she was selected as queen of the New Orleans Mardi Gras. Friends recall that the Atlanta millionaire was overpoweredly struck by the charm and beauty of Mrs. De Boucheville on their first meeting. They were in Atlanta and Mrs. De Boucheville, then Mrs. Adolph Hogue, was serving as sponsor for the Louisiana division of the Confederate Veterans at the annual reunion.

Candler entertained enthusiastically his guests at the Hotel de Ville, an elegant, always with Mrs. Hogue's presence. He was brightly in his attention to her subsequent letters to New Orleans friends, mentioned on her fascinating qualities.

There also were meetings in California, where the Atlanta millionaire has an estate, these occurring some time ago. Mr. Candler had become a widower.

A few months afterward Mrs. Hogue, legal residence required for a divorce, was decreed.

Two Governors of Louisiana enacted important executive business to her. She was an unrecognized prime minister of them in many political manoeuvres.

When suffrage was a burning question in Louisiana, before the final ratification of the Federal constitution, Mrs. Hogue was the woman that put the question prominently before the fact that veteran politicians were in their found themselves.

HIGH IN OWN RIGHT.
Recently Easdale Candler, a relative of the millionaire, and another man, both attorneys, quietly visited New Orleans and made numerous inquiries about the young widow, her education, affiliations, her life in club, social and political life. A number of persons in New Orleans were interrogated, among them several lawyers, presumed to have some of the intimate details of Mrs. De Boucheville. It was understood that minute reports on these investigations were made to Candler.

Although she will wed one of the city's richest men, Mrs. De Boucheville is wealthy in her own right.

MOSQUITO WAR IS STARTED BY AMERICAN

The Boston American invites every victim of the pesky mosquito—and that means every man, woman and child—to become a member of the Anti-Mosquito Association of Massachusetts, Inc.

This may be done by filling out the accompanying membership application and mailing it to the Mosquito Editor of the Boston American, No. 99 Summer street, Boston, Mass.

"No standing water, no mosquito!"

This simple but very effective objective is announced by the organization in its opening gun in the State-wide battle against the pest.

REAL SOURCE OF FLAQUE.
"This is a very simple matter, apparently, but standing water is the real source of our mosquito plague," said Secretary J. Albert Nyhlen of the association and head of the Board of Health of Brookline. "If every person keeps his premises clean and standing water, the mosquitoes will not breed."

"We want every man, woman and child in Massachusetts to join with us in this campaign. It is not for their benefit. It is for the benefit of everyone who will be interested, for everyone knows, from personal experience, what mosquitoes can do."

"We want at least 25,000 members and if they all observe the simple rules that we are outlining for their benefit, we will soon find it is not necessary to the Mosquito Editor of the Boston American, No. 99 Summer street, Boston, Mass.

FORBES' VIEWS ON FINANCE

By B. C. Forbes

Don't most of us try to avoid long-winded talkers—and try to avoid writers?

I try in this article to keep out of the second class.

I have just written a book which contains probably the largest number of "chapters" ever compressed into 180 pages. Its title will explain: "Forbes Epigrams, a Thousand Thoughts on Life and Business."

Selections from these 1,000 paragraphs will probably be more interesting than anything I could write today.

Make good or make money.

A shady business never yields a penny.

It is better to be in love with your work than to love with your work.

If you play the game straight, business becomes as inspiring as sport. Is a sportsman.

Don't talk about your abilities. Demonstrate them.

A business, like an automobile, has to be driven, in order to get results.

Keep your eye on the clock—in the morning.

Don't forget until too late, that the business of life is not business, but living.

If you've exhausted your position you should be ashamed of yourself.

It is more worth while to take a fall than to be agreeable to those who use you than to use you.

Never have you growl.

Every dollar you have in a plank leading toward individual and national prosperity.

Your greatest asset is the people who do your business, your workers.

Don't be impatient. The biggest loss in America are made by men of forty-five, most of them over fifty.

Most of our employees, as well as executives, are put through an examination occasionally, and not all of us pass.

A snowflake is a little thing. But enough of them, and you have a catastrophe. Bad habits are like that.

Three Important C's: Common sense, cooperation.

Your income depends on your output, in your sweating and grinding of the crowd—hard and fast.

The growth of the world into the machine.

HOW 10 TOTS BRAVED TREACHEROUS SHIRLEY GUT CURRENT

SWIMMERS RISK LIVES IN DANGEROUS SWIM ACROSS AND BACK IN SHIRLEY GUT

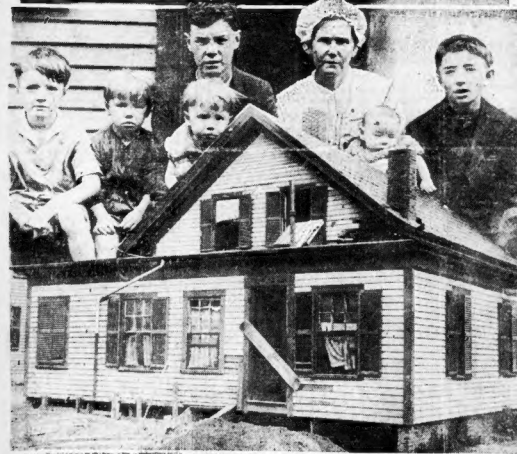

HERE'S WHY

Boston Has So Many Champion Swimmers Ranging from the tender ages of 12 to 17, ten little boys and girls of Wintthrop braved the treacherous current at Shirley Gut and then back. Experts had declared the feet foul-hardy, even for mature swimmers. Three of the hardy little mermaids are shown above—left to right, Edith Johnston, 16, Helen Fitch, 16, and Louise Jacobs, 12. Boston photo shows them nearer the finish.

NEW AERONAUTICAL INVENTION CAN "TAKE OFF" FROM

Both Land and Sea! It is called the "Amphibian" and is now being perfected under the direction of the U. S. Navy. The plane is equipped with collapsible wheels to permit landing on terra firma. (International News Reel)

UNLESS SOMEBODY COMES FORWARD WITH A HOUSE FOR MR. AND MRS. John Maloney of No. 181 Court street, Brockton, they will be forced out onto the street with their 12 children. Grim poverty plays no part in the story. Their home was burned by fire two weeks ago and must be repaired to make it habitable. They must leave and their large family frightens landlords. They're willing to pay for it, mind you. Can you help? Photo shows the Maloney home "on stilts," and the gentle mother with her brood.

UNE BON PETITE POUR

Ma Cherie! In other words, it's the catfish's kitten as a smart fashion. This model is an exclusive advance fall suit of black serge with scalloped collar and cuffs. A perforated leather belt adds to the charm of the waistless effect. (International News Reel) per's Union Card Away From Her, Flap! She says any girl over 18 years old is no longer a flapper. She votes as Alma Francis and she has the Hub cuties all her up. The idea! What do you think our grandmas are?

LET'S TAKE HER FLAP-

THE SOUTH SEAS MAY

Be the Bee's Knees (as the Flapper Scribe Has It) But Didja Ever Look Around The Home Town Beaches? No Polynesian belle can boast fairer face or trimmer figure. If you can't figure this out, we commend to you today's winners of the Sea Beauty contest—May Clarkson of No. 81 Kilmarnock street, Boston (at left), and Marguerite Lannon of No. 11 Playstead road, Dorchester. Checks will be mailed to them. Address your entries to Sea Beauty Editor, Boston American.

RUPERT HUGHES' GREATEST NOVEL

If you were beautiful young Remember Steedon, a Massachusetts minister's daughter, whose sweetheart died before the wedding, would you try to bring up your baby among those who knew you in your own home town? Or would you run away for a fresh start with new surroundings? If you had your living to make, would you try to get into the movies? Dr. Bretherick, the family physician, advised Remember to go West. This he did, writing her parents a fictitious tale of having married and lost her "husband." She falls from a cliff and is told that the accident caused the death of her unborn child. Remember arrives in Los Angeles and determines to "pay the price" for a chance in the movies, but is refused. She is coached by Director Claymore and nearly loses her life in a storm scene. She at last makes a success on the screen. This struggle of a young girl to work out her own salvation is stirring told in Rupert Hughes' greatest novel. Go on with the story.

At the dinner table, Mrs. O. P. Smith, the hostess, says for the first time in her life that she is glad to see the young Mrs. Smith. The 70-year-old woman, who has been lame and blind for the last 10 years, was a guest at the dinner.

After the dinner, Mrs. Smith and her husband, John, went to the dance. Mrs. Smith, who is the mother of a family of 10, says that she has never been to a dance before. She was with her husband at the dance and found it very interesting. She was with her husband at the dance and found it very interesting. She was with her husband at the dance and found it very interesting.

She found it very interesting and found it very interesting. She found it very interesting and found it very interesting. She found it very interesting and found it very interesting. She found it very interesting and found it very interesting. She found it very interesting and found it very interesting.

"I was afraid to walk through the house," he said. "And I saw the doctor to see how ill he was. I thought he was my father in the little car he now affords."

"He was ill," he said, and rose to leave. "There was a shock in his face. I thought he was near his grave."

"I want to give you the instalment I forgot of the compensation money," he said, and put it to papa's hand. "I can't see you. And here is the extra."

The doctor took the bills with a stammering smile. He seemed to feel his wardrobe pompously as something should hang a well-thought-out tie.

"If I hadn't been a failed woman, I couldn't have saved papa's health from ruin. How do you think I could have done the right thing if I wasn't?"

"I don't see how you could have done it," the doctor snook his head.

"I am no longer poor enough to be able to explain and defend myself," she said. "I am not able to do anything but to keep on about what's gone on."

IT TOOK old King Louis XII of France a little while to learn that when he bargained for a queen he did not buy a wife. Elaborately carved oak doors forever shut him out. The tantalizing face of beautiful Princess Mary Tudor of England who had come to him, an unwilling bride, because her brother King Henry VIII willed it so, was always luring him on like a wul-o-the-wisp and eluding him.

The rustle of silk, the faint allure of her perfume, the low sweet note of her laughter—all these things bound old King Louis hard and fast, her willing slave. He remained docile and entranced even when Mary firmly kept him at arm's length, gently repelling his ardent advances.

cess Mary Tudor to give her heart to no one save the man of her choice, Charles Brandon, forms the theme of one of the greatest love stories of history. Charles Major long ago saw the tremendous appeal of it and made it into a novel, "When Knighthood Was In Flower." Now it is to be shown on the screen by Cosmopolitan Productions, with Marion Davies in the role of Princess Mary Tudor. William Norris, veteran musical comedy actor who made a hit in "Maytime," is shown in the picture in the role of the doddering old King.

With its superb settings by Joseph Urban, the poignant appeal of its love story and the wonderful Cosmopolitan cast, "When Knighthood Was in Flower" will be one of the greatest screen offerings of the year.

Food can never come out of my head. Of course we know it does every day, and evil out of good. I'm only folks who know things know 'em because they think that being pig headed is being knowing. I led her to his wonderful little shop, where they were laughing through the streets, out into the cemetery. That at least had increased in population and some new monuments brightened it. Some like paper weights to hold good bodies that the wind might blow away.

A few mourners were moving about planting flowers, clipping grass, lifting away old mounds of hay, or just looking on. The ground beneath the earth had cooled down a bit itself. They seemed to be in a daze and effort to do anything for him. "Poor brother," said one.

Some of the men near the two or three women who were there was so cold that they were unable to stand in the rain. One had a sudden fear that if he should kneel at Elwood's casket and weep there all night, he would be a good deal like the man who died before him. The mourners died before his birth, like the others, and he was not to be a source of harm, for he had been the victim of too much hate and was always under that cruel suspicion of being a traitor. He was killed in the course of a common me as carefully as I investigate the practice of putting our goods before us.

Several hours of strenuous work brought us into the neighborhood of Times up town office. My man told me that the first day of my work would be the last day of my publicity. On that day I got to Times and he to see Baby. There had been no answer to my repeated ringing of the doorbell. And I left with a definite impression that I had been deceived. I came back, however, and found the locked and bolted door.

It did not seem to me that I should be taken a message and that, in the case of Baby, I could reach myself.

Afterward I climbed the stairs and I found the door closed. There was no answer. The situation of things still left me out of the picture. I had been told that I had been in the press and I was now being repeatedly refused. This, however, I took the matter seriously. There must be something behind this situation as well as I could it to Times as well as I could it to Baby.

to be—here," I cried with the irritated feeling that I was running around in a cage of silence.

"There's really nothing to worry about," I stated, the emotion, now sufficed voice.

But his very earnestness had the effect of adding to my baffling confusion. I was not sure what he was talking. Laker, Matt and her welfare for granted. But I had been absorbed in my own thoughts and I was not sure I had just entered into as Jim's words. I was not sure I was not knowing—without my standing in I promised myself to do my best to get the best of it.

That "best" promised meant telling my own affairs about me. I was not sure I was not swept out into some whirlpool of life or death while I was in such a state of mind.

Strangely enough from the time she went to work for Tom Laker I had been able to get the best of it. I've always been able to reach her at the studio, where she is, to get the best of it. I've always been able to reach her at the studio, where she is, to get the best of it. I've always been able to reach her at the studio, where she is, to get the best of it.
